MILID Scientific Journal is a science journal co-published by the Journalism and Communication Sciences Department of the Autonomous University of Barcelona (UAB) and Tsinghua University. This scientific journal is one of the collaborative actions carried out under “The UNESCO-UNAOC University Network on Media and Information Literacy and Intercultural Dialogue (MILID)”

The detail information about journal focus and scope are in the web platform.

Besides receiving articles in continual flux, the MILID Journal is doing a particularly call for papers for the following theme:

Media Literacy and Social Inclusion

Milid Journal invites authors to present papers that contribute to use media and education for social inclusion goals. It welcomes initiatives that focus on developing teaching methodologies to improve the socially disadvantaged groups’ involvement in broadcasting, new technologies and adult education provision.

Concerning media literacy, disadvantaged are early school leavers, minorities of any kind of a given social structure, and adult population that falls out of the educational system and the job market and completely rely on the media as a source to create and convey “reality”.

Submission deadline: March 30, 2014.

Submissions to the journal should be sent via the online platform

After the author’s registration another copy is requested to be sent by email to: revista.milid@uab.cat

The journal accepts originals in English but articles in national languages are also accepted. Both versions will be published. Evaluation and peer-review will be made on the English version.
